tion in part. The Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, under date of May 1914, has just published a map of the White Mountain Region. This map does not show all the trails found in the sheets of the Geological Survey, it is nevertheless a map both interesting and useful. It covers the district from Gilead, Stucum and Fryeburg west across the crest of New Hampshire to the Connecticut River, reaching from Gilead to Gorham south to the Ossipee country. The roads and trails are well and fully shown, as are the locations of the principal peaks. In addition to these features, the limits of the proposed Forest Reserve and the tracts offered for purchase by the government and for the most part actually purchased, are indicated. The map is at hand free on request, from the U. S. Forest Service, Gorham, N. H.

KITCHEN CONVENIENCES THAT MAKE MORE WORK.

Every now and then we hear a long story of a fresh bit of advice from some teacher of domestic science or writer of advice to brides from somebody who has never qualified in that branch of woman's work; relative to home keeping as it should be kept. With joy we read them because they are so different, and with alacrity we forget them after we have read them, possibly filling some clipping from them in our note book, religiously to be forgotten forever after. That's what we did with a yarn we read not long ago about the need and necessity of woman's trying to make their daily routine of work easier by calling into requisition the many, the very many, helps for housework that are now supplied by the various stores, the willing advertisers, the earnest canvassers and the friends who do their turn in supplying hints for the using. And thinking it all over, I feel to myself, while the fire burns, on the dinky little things, my own kitchen closets and shelves bear for just these very purposes and the very small use I make of them. From there my thoughts ran to the experiences of my friends in the same direction and the more I thought of it, the more I remembered the usefulness of the useful in a regard. For example: There is a contraption in a neglected corner of my kitchen closet, which bears the suggestive name of meat chopper. I remember the time when to be possessed of one of these shiny, complicated affairs seemed the chief desire of my housewife heart. To be sure, I did not very often chop meats, and never chopped other things, for our family was not of the choppy kind; but who could resist the temptation of turning that cute little handle about, and seeing the sharp, quaintly shaped knives cut vegetables, and odd things for salads, and hard boiled eggs for the fish dress ing, and all the rest of it? Simply to be the owner of that little affair spelled economic or money and time and temper, and it must be ours.

We did not go to the extent of purchasing one for our husband for Christmas to make sure of owning one as some of the less scrupulous women have done, but we got one and for a time served all sorts of things the family would not eat, just to try the chopper, we explained. And then, one day, we realized that it had been some time since the chopper had been in Florence, So. Dakota.—"I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache and good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. P. W. LAWRENCE, Route No. 1, Florence, South Dakota.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

use and we tried to decide why, finally coming to the conclusion that to our unsystematic soul we had determined that the bother of washing the dozen or more parts and putting them together again seemed more of a task than preparing our salad in the old-fashioned way, with knife and fingers. And then we began to watch our daily way, and were not long in discovering that while the house was full of labor saving devices garnered in by many years of investments, a good part of our business went on according to the methods of our mothers and grandmothers. We have needle threaders, and spool holders, and bias cutting guides but still we sew as mother did, biting the thread off, if the truth be told, with our own front teeth, instead of employing the patent thread cutter on the sewing machine. We beat cake with our hands or with the old wooden spoon we have had for a long, long time, oblivious of the patent machine for performing the act; we bake bread in the tins we have used for an equal period of time though we have some perfectly lovely corrugated affairs that produce perfect bread, all marked for the cutting if we only thought to use them. We are well supplied with dust-ers so mediated that they consume dust beyond ever being seen again, and yet, we caught ourselves using the corner of our apron, or the convenient cloth that hangs on the nail behind the kitchen stove, just as formerly we did, before we invested our quarter in the novelty. Every well equipped home has its gas lighter which ignites with out danger of sparks, by the simple contraction of the hand ("so simple a child can use it," you remember, and yet, we purchase matches by the gross, even as we used to do in the long ago. Six years ago, or was it five? We bought a lot of rubber affairs to fit on over the tips of the rockers, and on the legs of the chairs, to protect the floors, and our shins. Like fire insurance, the possession has accomplished the trick without labor on our part; at least, the caps never were fitted in to their places nor do we remember that shins have suffered unduly by the neglect. We do remember however, that we were convinced, before we bought the things, that only by so buying was there any chance for safety to house or family.

A vacuum cleaner for the carpet, caused discontent in the household for one whole season, before we saved up sufficient cash to purchase one. It is still a matter of family record that never in the existence of our domestic experiences has such scrupulously neat carpets been known as for the first few weeks after that cleaner came into the house and yet, we find that nowadays, except for the weekly sweeping throughout the house that it has at ways been the custom to give it, the broom or the carpet sweeper that pushes on the end of a stick is as popular as ever. It takes too much time to tug the vacuum, attach it to the fixtures, detach it and carry it away, we reason, except for special occasions. Probably you own a strawberry butter, as most of us do, and a butter for apples, a butter for oranges and a butter similar things, tell me frankly, how often do you use them if you have a box of butter to hold for tea, or orange to fix for Dad's breakfast, or use similar small job to execute, on demand? Not once in a dozen times of the truth be told. All these things exist, but are long to the kitchen regime, but are haphazard out of tea will tell you, "they take too much time" if you ask them about it.

Helps that are a nuisance are not helps, they are simple collateral which takes up room, eats up pocket money, and amounts to nothing in particular. There are special cases where some particular thing may make work easier and lighter and quicker of execution. The same thing for another person will be a bother, rather than an assistant. The ordinary home keeping for a small family, requires such small bits of labor on a single thing, as few movements to complete the special act, that a thing which looks very helpful and desirable, really proves to be a hindrance, or action one. The woman who has two floors and few of them finds a dust mop, used after the old fashioned method, much kinder, better and quicker than a vacuum, and the woman who consumes perhaps three boxes of berries in a season can get along nicely without a berry huller, or fruit juice extractor if she thinks of it. It's the common knowledge of a canvasser that a woman usually buys, rather than refuses, for foolish pride or uneasiness over the call, and so, the doors are constantly besieged by good, honest people who have things to sell and nothing catches a woman quicker than something "to make housework easy," no matter whether it is going to fulfill its mission or not. Hence, the condition of the closets in more than one household, as you can testify. Relieving work by making work is poor economy any day.—Madame Myself in Portland Express.

In ordinary cases where the cuttings are small they should be left where they fall, notwithstanding the contrary opinion of the one-eyed person who follows up his cuttings by raking with a iron rake. Lawns should never be raked with an iron rake, except to prepare them for the sowing of grass seed, for such raking burrows up the soil. Neither should they be swept.

If the diligent caretaker of a lawn must follow up the cutting by some other operation, only a wooden rake should be used, and this should be employed carefully so as not to disturb the soil of the grass cuttings as have settled down around the roots. These grass cuttings that settle around the roots afford them a very important protection and will do much to keep the lawn in fine condition when there is lack of rain later in the season, for they will hold the moisture and act as a shield from the sun. In fact, the grass cuttings are generally needed about the roots, and should not be detracted from the looks of the lawn, for they soon shrivel, dry up, and work their way down, so that they are no longer noticed. Grasses are naturally cool-climate plants and are liable to be burned by the hot sun about the roots.

PACKAGES OF FOOD MUST TELL THE TRUTH AS TO CONTENTS.

The regulations for the carrying out of the so-called "netweight law," which compels manufacturers to make a clear statement of the weight, volume, or contents of their packages of food, were signed May 11 by the Secretaries of the Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce. These regulations apply to foods shipped in interstate commerce or sold in the District of Columbia or the Territories. The regulations as signed become effective at once, although the law, passed March 3, 1913, as an amendment to the food and drugs act, defers the exacting of penalties for violations until September 3, 1914.

The regulations, in general require that the manufacturer of foods shall plainly mark all packages, bottles, or other containers holding more than 2 ounces avoirdupois, or more than 1 fluid ounce, to show the net weight or volume of the contents. The measure must be stated in avoirdupois pounds and ounces, United States gallons, quarts, pints, or fluid ounces, United States standard bushels, half bushels, pecks, quarts, pints, or half pints. The contents by a like method may be expressed in terms of metric weight or measure. The volume of liquids must be computed at 68 degrees F.

The quantity stated on the container must represent the actual quantity of food exclusive of wrappings and containers.

In general, solids must be stated in terms of weight and liquids in terms of volume, except that where there is a definite trade custom otherwise any marking of the package in terms that are generally understood to express definite quantities will be permitted. The quantity of viscous or semisolid food or of mixtures of solids and liquids may be stated either by weight or measure, but the statement must clearly indicate whether the quantity is expressed in terms of weight or measure.

In the case of certain articles the contents may be stated by numerical count, provided such numerical count gives accurate information as to the quantity of food in the package. Under this requirement it would not be enough to state that a package of candy contained 21 cream peppermints, as candies vary in size, and this would not be a statement of the actual quantity of candy in the package.

The regulation also permits the statement of minimum volume or weight, as "Minimum weight, 12 ounces"; "Minimum volume, 1 gallon"; "Not less than 4 ounces." In such cases the amount stated must approximate the actual quantity. No variations below the stated minimum quantity will be permitted.

The statement of weight or measure must be marked in terms of the largest unit contained in the package; for example, if the package contains a pound and a fraction, the contents must be expressed in terms of pounds and fractions thereof, or pounds and ounces, and not merely in ounces.

TOLERANCES.

In the packing and bottling of many foods it would be impossible, or else add unnecessarily to cost, for the manufacturer to place an absolutely accurate statement of the amount of the food in every package, and for this reason the regulations permit tolerances or variations in packages where the discrepancies are due exclusively to unavoidable errors in weighing, measuring, or counting which occur in packing and bottling in compliance with good commercial practice. This tolerance is allowed in order to permit the use of weighing and measuring machines which, like human operators, can not weigh or measure with absolute accuracy every package. The regulations, however, provide that a run of such packages must show as many cases of overweight and as many cases of underweight as of underweight or under-volume.

Similarly in the case of bottles, which can not be blown with absolute accuracy, tolerances are allowed, but with the same proviso that the run of bottles must show as much excess in volume as deficiency in volume. Queer-shaped bottles must not show greater discrepancies than standard round or square bottles of the same capacity.

This means that a manufacturer who uses some special bottle of odd shape can not claim a greater variation because of the difficulty of blowing or manufacturing such a bottle or container.

Because goods shipped from one part of the country to another lose in weight by natural evaporation due to differences of atmospheric conditions or temperature, tolerances will be allowed for such changes. The proper tolerances to be allowed will be determined on the facts in each case, and it is probable that the department will establish tolerances for evaporation for various foods.

Packages containing 2 ounces avoirdupois or 1 fluid ounce of food or less are considered small and are exempted from marking in terms of weight. The reason for this is that providing accurate small bottles and accurately measuring their contents in the case of a number of articles sold in small packages for 5 or 10 cents would be prohibitive in cost to the manufacturers and would force them to raise the price for the package or to put less food in it for the same price.

MY FADED FLOWERS.
By Ellen P. Kimball.
O, wherefore were ye sent to bloom,
But cheer my pathway to the tomb—
O, wherefore were ye sent to fade
But for this we too were made.

The fragrance that exhales from you,
Ye lovely blossoms wet with dew—
Methinks is like a noble life,
All free from every sin and strife.

The lovely things that God has made
May in the dust be lovely laid—
But blessed thought—the beauty lives
To other lives its perfume gives.

The frost has come my flowers to blight,
Now lies their beauty from my sight—
But seeds have fallen and we find
Another year grows that same kind.

No influence reaches far and wide
Its power is felt where'er betide—
In whatever sphere our lives may be
The influence goes to eternity.

The flowers of earth—they fade and die,
But soon we'll reach that home on high—
Where's no more a tear—not even a sigh,
And flowers ne'er fade and springs ne'er dry.

"BEYOND THE STARS,"
When the shades of night are falling,
All is hushed—o'er land and sea;
In the night watch thou art calling—
In my dreams the face I see

My thoughts go back to childhood days
Now gone, alas! beyond recall;
You left me at the parting ways,
But still my heart remembers all.

It was cruel fate's decree, love,
That so soon we two should part;
Oh! that your spirit from above,
Could soothe this aching in my heart.

When the dawn is eastward wending,
Lifting night's mantle as it flies;
Hear I then your sweet voice wending,
The sacred strains of Paradise.

Could I leave this earthly portal,
Break these chains of mortal fate;
Then the wings of the immortals,
I'd wing with thee beyond the stars.

"SHOW HIM YOUR HANDS,"
In one poor room that was all their home,
A mother lay on the bed,
Her seven children around her;
And calling the oldest, she said:
"I'm going to leave you, Mary;
You're nearly fourteen you know;
And now you must be a good girl,
dear,
And make me easy to go.
You can't depend much on father,
But just be patient, my child,
And keep the children out of his way,
Whenever he comes home with;
And keep the house as well as you can;
And little daughter thank
He didn't want to be so,
Remember, it's all the drink."

The weeping daughter promised
Always to do her best;
And closing her eyes over weary life,
The mother entered her rest.
And Mary kept her promise
As faithfully as she might;
She worked and washed and mended,
And kept things tidy and bright,
And when her father came home drunk,
The children were sent to bed,
And Mary waited alone and took
The beatings to their head.
And little daughter finger lost
Through childish mischief and grace,
And a long, cold, and a chapped,
And the raw, childish face
Showed thin and baggard and anxious,
Crawling, tired and old;
As on these slender shoulders
The burden of life was rolled.

A PRACTICAL TALK ON THE POTATO.

Value of Seed Selection by Professor Harold S. Osler.

"Better seed will produce more, at less relative cost," was the live fact running through Prof. Osler's talk on Potato Seed Selection in the Farmer's Week Course. The speaker first gave results of definite experiments to prove the above statement and then outlined a plan for selecting and storing seed. The lecture was important, not only from the standpoint of potato growers of both table and seed stock but also from other crops since the principles are in most cases applicable. We regret that the entire lecture could not have been secured, but the essential points were substantially as follows:

Many potato growers have failed to maintain and increase yields because of improper selection of seed at picking time, and because of careless storing during the winter. Maine is rapidly changing from a section producing high grade table potatoes to a section producing both table stock and seed for the Southern trade. New methods must be adopted in order to secure and retain this trade. All crops vary in production and in the quality of the product.

Potatoes dug by hand show great variation in the yield of individual hills. Vigorous plants may produce a large number of tubers of desirable size or all the tubers may be small. Experimental data shows that thirty-four high-yielding hills produced forty-seven pounds of marketable potatoes and six pounds of "culls." One hundred and six low yielding hills produced thirty-nine pounds of marketable potatoes and fifteen pounds of "culls." The average yield of marketable tubers from high yielding hills was twenty-two ounces and from the low yielding hills six ounces. Figuring on an acre basis, with rows three feet apart and hills fifteen inches apart in the row, allowing a 10 per cent stand, and yielding at the rate of the high yield, the production would have been two hundred and forty-three bushels of marketable tubers per acre and at the rate of the low yield the production would have been sixty-four bushels per acre. The actual yield of the plot where this selection was made was at the rate of one hundred and sixty-one bushels per acre. All these hills were selected from the same lot and from the same variety of potatoes. Experiments during the years 1911 and 1912 by the United States Department of Agriculture show quite a variation in yield between vigorous and weak plants. The former produced sixteen times as large a yield of marketable tubers and only twice as many culls as did the weak plants. The average weight of the large tubers from strong plants was 5.3 ounces and 3.8 ounces from the weak plants. The culls weighed about the same in both cases. The average yield of one hundred hills from high yielding seed during a three year experiment at the Ohio Station was one hundred and thirty-eight pounds. From unselected seed, one hundred and ten pounds. From low yielding seed, seventy-three pounds. The gain from the use of seed from high yielding plants over unselected and low yielding was 25 per cent. and 50 per cent. respectively.

After the grower has mixed the potatoes in the bin, he has no way of telling the character of the plant or the yield of the hill from which they came. The chances are that he unconsciously plants many tubers produced by low yielding hills and in this way reduces his yields.

While it is not practical to select seed for large areas in this way, a system of multiplication plots can be used to produce seed for the main crop. In beginning such selection the most promising hills should be selected from the best part of the field and then dug by hand. The products of each hill should be carefully examined and the undesirable ones discarded. Three bushels of seed will be necessary to plant one fourth of an acre seed plot. At the rate of 200 bushels, such a plot would produce 70 bushels. Hill selected seed can be taken from this plot for the next year's seed plot and the remainder used to plant the main crop. It is best in making the initial selection to select as high standard as possible, if course it is understood in carrying out such a line of work that the grower is working with a variety that produces tubers of smooth uniformly medium size that are of a typical shape for the variety being selected and one that is demanded by the seed trade. By following this plan, the grower should be able in a few years to develop a pure, high yielding strain of the variety selected.

Proper selection will not do it all. A reasonable amount of care must be exercised in the storage over winter. They should be handled carefully and stored in a dark well-ventilated cellar at a temperature just sufficiently high to prevent freezing. In the development of a desirable variety and in the production of tubers to supply the seed trade, care should be used not to allow any mixtures of varieties and different strains within a variety should be eliminated as far as possible. At the present time, this very trouble is hindering the disposal of Maine grown seed for the Southern trade. Seed has been purchased guaranteed pure to name but on being planted a number of strains were observed and the grower bought his seed from another state the next year. Extra precaution should be used in the selection of seed to see that all hills which are selected are absolutely free from disease. Some of the diseases which are of minor importance in themselves in Maine, often develop into a violent form when tubers are shipped South to supply the Southern trade. Careful consideration should be given this point by all growers. These difficulties should be remedied before the State gets a bad reputation and all Maine potatoes are suspected. It is easier to keep a good reputation than to get rid of a bad one as some of the other potato growing states are learning. Every grower should heed these precautions and cooperate to see that their neighbors do likewise.

LEGISLATION ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Forty-eight States Have Laws of Different Kinds.

Legislation dealing with tuberculosis has been enacted in forty-eight states and territories of the United States, according to a comprehensive bulletin on this subject soon to be published by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Only in the states of Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, and Alaska, has the subject been given no legislative consideration.

State tuberculosis sanatoria to the number of 42 have been established in 23 different states. Special laws providing for the establishment of local hospitals by municipalities of counties have been passed in 14 states. In 31 states, laws are in force providing for the reporting and registration of living cases of tuberculosis. In four states, New York, New Jersey, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, special laws have been enacted giving state and local health authorities power to remove and detain tuberculosis persons who menace the health of their families or associates. Six states, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, New York, and Texas, have laws which give the people the privilege of voting at general or special elections on the establishment of county or municipal tuberculosis hospitals. Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, Wisconsin, and Washington grant subsidies ranging from $300 to $500 per year to such local hospitals. Laws prohibiting spitting in public places have been enacted in more than 30 states.

Concerning the problem of state legislation as it affects the prevention of tuberculosis, The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis says: "A law providing for the reporting and registration of living cases of tuberculosis is fundamental to any thoroughgoing campaign against this disease. Without knowledge of the location of every case of tuberculosis, the disease cannot be controlled. Of equal importance also is legislation which will give cities, towns, and counties the authority to establish and maintain local hospitals for tuberculosis cases. The control of tuberculosis is a local problem. Every thing possible should be done to provide institutions easy of access, especially for advanced cases."

ton recently, and although he and his confederates established a basis for the Interstate Commerce Commission's findings, yet he now declares that politics lie at the bottom of the report. However, it is noticeable that while the government is tightening the reins on corporation control, that the managers of big business are trying to "keep within the law," and gauge their transactions in such a manner that the big officials will be able to escape judges and courts. The process of an awakened business conscience has gone so far that it may even be possible for some of the heads of trusts to enter heaven.

WHEN WILL CONGRESS ADJOURN?

When the flowers bloomed in the spring, tra la, President Wilson asked Congress to finish its work and go home by July 1. Leader Underwood cogitated and stretched the date to July 10, and Senator Kern pulled the suggestion along to the middle of the month. But the prospects are no better than they were weeks ago, and now Kern, who is quoted most because he is the nominal Senate leader, is advocating some sort of a stopwatch proposition upon Senatorial eloquence. Kern is too much of a Senator and a gentleman to suggest a gag rule, but within the last few days he has said: "I believe the majority of the Senate is in favor of some closure. Under the present rules one perverse Senator may, on his own motion, delay proceedings by holding the floor against all others, while with the aid of one or two others he can demand roll calls and block proceedings indefinitely." There are a lot of campaigns out in the country that are suffering for want of personal attention, and political leaders are in full sympathy with that part of the country which is tired and believes that it is time for Congress to go home.

WILSON AND NEXT TERM

A good many people have to the notion that a strict reading of the Baltimore platform takes Mr. Wilson out of the equation for 1916. But the practical method of looking at the matter was expressed by Speaker Champ Clark at the time he broke with the administration on the Panama Canal tolls matter, and declared that if President Wilson's policies were successful that the country would demand his re-nomination in 1916; and if his policies were a failure then the nomination would not be worth having. It is doubtful if there has been as violent a case of presidential itch in recent years as that which has attacked Speaker Clark. In consequence he manufactured a number of panaceas to remedy the evils of the presidency, and he has recently blossomed out as the advocate of a term of six years, because, he declares, "the president spends most of his first trying to get back again."

THE RESIGNATION OF HUERTA

Since the beginning of the "watchful waiting" policy in reference to Mexico the fond hope that Huerta would resign has been heralded in headlines of newspapers in the National Capital and throughout the country as often as was the old question concerning the age of Ann. But although the United States has been compelled to make a great deal of rough house in Mexico, the crafty old fox who holds the presidency has been as stubborn as some of the old old Indians of the "Sitting Bull" kind who bothered the administrations of former days. After all, why should not "Sitting Bull" be a good designation for the Mexican puzzle.

HAWK WEED NUISANCE

Commissioner of Agriculture Making Investigation.—To Report Later.

An order passed at the last meeting of the governor and council will be of interest to farmers in every section of the state where "hawk weed" is interfering with the growth of the grass, and thereby diminishing the hay crop. The order reads as follows: "Ordered: That the commissioner of agriculture investigate the counties in the state of Maine for the purpose of determining how much territory is infested by the 'hawk weed,' and what means it is necessary to take for the extermination of the same and report at the next meeting of the governor and council."

Commissioner of Agriculture, J. A. Roberts, is now making an investigation of the counties of the state in order that his report may be complete by the date of the next council meeting, Wednesday, July 29.

Assistant Horticulturist H. P. Sweet reported Monday morning that this weed has a foothold in all counties of the state and is increasing rapidly. The fact that "hawk weed" spreads both by seed and by roots makes it exceedingly difficult to eradicate. A quantity of these broad weeds in a field will choke out the grass in a short time.

SMALL FRUITS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

E. F. Hitchings, Associate Professor of Horticulture.

There is no excuse for a man, who owns a half-acre of land, in not growing enough small fruit to supply his family with choice berries throughout the season.

Fruits are a necessity, not a luxury, from the standpoint of ideal conditions of health, and should be on the table in every home. A few rods of land will produce bushels of choice fruit, if properly cared for. A small bed of strawberries, a few short rows of raspberries, a half dozen currant and gooseberry bushes will yield a rich harvest of luscious berries.

We will discuss the proposition on a larger scale:

Selection of a site: For ideal conditions we would prefer a gentle slope to the East or Southeast, although for some fruits like the raspberry and blackberry, a Northeast or even northerly slope would not be objectionable. The morning sun is very desirable for fruit production.

Soil: Berries can be grown in almost any soil but, as a rule, they take kindly to light loam, or in general terms, a good corn land is good fruit land. This must be in a fine condition of fifth, be deep, have a good humus content, so as to retain moisture, be free from weed grass and weed seed.

Soil Preparation: The great secret of success lies in the correct preparation of the soil, before the plants are set. The land should have been under cultivation for at least two years from the sod. Plow in late fall, just before freezing, turning it lightly, as deep as it has been previously plowed. Apply a good coat of barn manure. Cultivate with a disc harrow, and leave until spring. As soon as it is in condition to work, go over it with a cutaway harrow, both ways until it is nicely pulverized to the depth of at least four inches. Mark off the piece in straight rows and you are ready for the plants.

Securing Plants: Purchase the varieties you desire of some first-class nursery house, or from a nearby, reliable grower. Trim the roots before setting and if necessary dip them in water so as to keep them from drying out.

Setting: It is very important that the plants are well set. As a rule, all roots should be fanned out in their natural direction of growth. They should be covered a little deeper than when grown in the nursery. The soil should be pressed firmly around each plant, and, if necessary, watered at the time of setting.

Cultivation: Cultivation should be kept up through the season to conserve moisture and prevent weed growth.

Fertilization: If the land is deficient in nitrogen and humus, it would be well to apply some hen manure or any good commercial fertilizer at the time of cultivation.

Fall Care: If strawberries are grown, they will need mulching for winter protection. Straw is best, urine marsh hay is good, but in any case, the plants should be lightly covered.

Spring Care: As soon as the land has warmed up in spring, remove the mulch and cultivate freely between the rows. This applies to all small fruits, whether mulched or not. Apply a good fertilizer and cultivate or mulch as the case requires. All old canes should be removed among the cane fruits, and any diseased or infested parts from the bush fruits. After the fruiting season the strawberry plants should be moved over and the material burned in all cases.

Insect and Fungus Troubles: There are many insect troubles to be handled; among the most important being cane borers, leaf eaters, fruit flies, and insects affecting the roots. Among the fungous troubles may be mentioned, orange rust and root-gall of the cane fruits; anthracnose, mildew, leaf spot, etc.

Results: At present there is a wide field for the growing of small fruits in the State. The demand far exceeds the supply. Many have failed to make good on the first attempt, because of lack of knowledge of the business, and application to it.

As a medicinal antiseptic for douches in treating catarrh, inflammation or ulceration of nose, throat, and that caused by feminine life it has no equal. For ten years the Lydie E. BRIGHT OUTLOOK FOR THE FARMER IN THIS STATE

That the call of the land is being heard by the people is shown by the fact that the number of abandoned farms in Maine is growing less each year. It also shows that the public knows that the laws of supply and demand determine to a great extent the cost of living and that, with an increasing production, will come a decrease in price.

There were 3,398 abandoned farms in the State of Maine in 1890, according to the statistics made at that time by the State Bureau. This amounted to a total of 254,513 acres of unworked farm lands.

At the present time it is estimated that there are some 60,000 farms in the State of Maine, located in 500 different towns. There is no available information in any of the State departments on the present number of abandoned farms in Maine, but a poll of the real estate dealers, insurance people and different assessors shows that the probable number is about 150, with a total acreage of something like 115,050 acres.

It is difficult to draw the dividing line between an abandoned farm and one of the real estate from which the owners have moved and the farms are now occupied by other people, in many cases changing occupants frequently, and sometimes without occupants. In some towns and villages there is a large percentage of non-resident property, some of it constantly depreciating. With regard to depreciation, however, the same may be said of some of the resident property. At the same time, much of the non-resident lands are being cultivated and improved.

There are a number of causes that contribute to the abandonment of farms in Maine. In some cases the land may be rich and good for cultivation and afford a living for its occupants, but the people living on it may not be numerous enough to cultivate it. This is true of other parts of this Kingdom as well as Maine. There are other special reasons that have caused a decrease in the population with the closing of the farm. The absence of families of youth and small standing in a given community has caused people to move away as the demand for labor only certain seasons of the year, in contrast with all-year-round employment found in the cities. The absence of schools for the children in the country of a grade to compare with those of the cities and larger towns has caused whole families to migrate from the homestead. The longer hours of work at certain seasons and the lack of amusement and of religious advancement has caused dissatisfaction among the younger members of the family, with the result that the farm has been abandoned to lease them. Besides all of these, there is the lack of easy communication, which leaves the farm lonely, especially during the long days of winter.

The school system has been greatly improved in the last few years in the rural districts, and this has helped to keep the families of Maine on the farms. A number of the most fertile of the abandoned farms have been taken over by rich people during the last five years and converted into summer homes, although the land adjoining these homes has remained idle in a number of cases. More is being done every year in Maine to recall to the minds of those living in the agricultural section the value of systematic farming, and to this end the schools and colleges throughout the State are using their best endeavors.

It is the opinion of the State Agricultural Department that the highest standard of agriculture is not reached until every farm in the State can be so cultivated that it is constantly improving and yielding richer returns every year. In their judgment, nothing short of good farming pays. When the highest condition of agriculture is obtained, as it is fast doing in Maine under scientific teaching, it is believed that the Maine farmer will compete successfully with all other industries in the State.

One of the important problems confronting the farmers of Maine is the labor question. The fact that at times a sufficient quantity of help may be obtainable is not a solution of the problem. It is not altogether of help, but rather a question of reliable and efficient labor. It is felt throughout the State that this class of help will be much more reliable and valuable if it is permanently located in the State. Whether this is brought about by the addition of families from other parts of the country or from foreign countries is an important part of the problem.

From the reports given out by farm agencies, it is shown that there is a decided movement toward the State of Maine by people who have been residents of other States; in other words, the pilgrims are returning home after several many years in the West and other sections. This class of people are very welcome to the present residents, but in many cases they are people advanced in years, not able to undertake the arduous duties of farm life. Some foreign colonies have been introduced into the State, like the Polish colonies at West Paris and South Thomaston, and the Saxons in Aroostook County. These plan have worked well, and substantial and permanent communities have resulted.

$18,000,000 INVESTED IN MAINE AUTOMOBILES

"The latest registration of automobiles at the Department of State indicates that about 15,000 machines are owned in Maine," says W. E. Lowry, treasurer of the Develop Maine Movement.

"The officials have registered about 12,000 thus far and expect to register 3,000 more this summer, bringing the total up to 15,000. That means one machine for every 49 persons and an outlay of about $18,000,000 in first cost.

"Out in Wisconsin the bankers are beginning to wonder what the effect on the money market will be if the automobile craze develops further. That State has a population of 2,333,809 and the folks own about 50,000 automobiles, or one for every 46 inhabitants. This isn't a much larger number, in proportion to the population, than is found in Maine, yet the bankers out there are already discussing the drain on the financial resources of the state. The bankers estimate that about one quarter of the purchase price is paid in cash by the purchaser and that the other three quarters is furnished by some bank.

"If the same conditions hold good in Maine, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that such is the case, Maine automobile owners are in debt to the tune of $13,500,000 for automobiles. If the same sum could be assembled to investigate and then advertise and develop the natural resources of the state of Maine, the population at the next census in 1920 would be 1,742,000 instead of 742,000.

"Men who have but scratched the surface of Maine's natural resources in a lifetime of investigation, declare that Maine's natural wealth is still intact, that man has yet taken practically nothing from the total. They predict that the first discovery or exploitation of her mineral wealth will turn a tide of immigration into Maine that will put to shame the wonderful growth of the Pacific States and help
